West Coast Regional Dialogue of Catholics and Muslims

The West Coast Regional Dialogue of Catholics and Muslims resumed its activities at a transitional planning session at the Mary and Joseph Retreat Center in Rancho Palos Verdes, California, on January 31 to February 2, 2005. The Session was co-convened by Bishop Carlos Sevilla, S.J. of Yakima, Washington, and Dr. Muzammil H. Siddiqi of the Islamic Society of Orange County. The Secretariat for Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs staff was represented by Canon Francis V. Tiso.

The co-conveners gave an orientation to the work with scriptural interpretation. Dr. Siddiqi examined the Quran and the specific methods of hermeneutics that Islamic tradition employs. He then presented a number of verses that have been frequently misunderstood. Any single verse must be interpreted in the light of all that the Quran says about the covenants with God, was examined in the light of authentic Muslim scholarship. Bishop Sevilla's keynote concerned the question of divine inspiration of the Bible and the way the text may be internalized by the believer through faith. The believer, transformed by the encounter with the word in liturgy and prayer, more and more embodies God's self-disclosure to the world.

Dr. Iftikhar Hai explored problematic consequences of mistaken translations of Quranic verses, particularly those that make reference to the followers of other religions. The questions of abrogation and of a certain hardening in Quranic interpretation over recent centuries have given rise to violence and misunderstanding. The present situation of the world requires better translations and more nuanced interpretation of the sacred text so that its universal truth will be clearly seen.

Respondents noted that in the early centuries of Islam, dialogue with Christians and Jews contributed much to the subtlety of Quranic interpretation, something that can be recovered in the present time. Each human being has the obligation to seek out the truth and pursue it to the end; ultimate salvation is bestowed by God alone, so no human being can be condemned by those of us continued on page 7
President’s Letter by Robert Flannery

Dear NADEO members and friends,

You are receiving this newsletter during our annual Lenten pilgrimage focusing on the conversion of our hearts. May our personal journeys continue to be broadened, as we seek further reconciliation among our divided churches and religions, an outgrowth of our own stories of faith.

I trust that this year’s Week of Prayer for Christian Unity was a moment of grace and inspiration for you and the people of your diocese. Please remember that although the most common time to celebrate this event is the traditional week of January 18-25, a number of places use Pentecost or other times of the year which are more advantageous. Hopefully your parishes are using the prayer, or parts thereof, at parish meetings and other occasions. We thank the Graymoor Community for their faithful ministry in providing this yearly vehicle for ecumenical awareness and advancement.

By now you should have received your registration information for the upcoming National Workshop on Christian Unity in New Orleans, April 4-7. Besides an excellent variety of timely seminars offered in the general program, the NADEO Catholic Program will have a unique format and theme this year: The Decrees and Declarations on Ecumenism, Nostra Astate, and Religious Liberty—40 Years Later: Then and Now. All of the speakers on the panel (Rev. Drs. George Lindbeck, John Long, and George Tavard) were at the Second Vatican Council and have been involved with ecumenical and interreligious matters ever since. It promises to be an extremely beneficial presentation full of far-reaching insights for us all. The speaker at the NADEO luncheon this year will be Msgr. Robert L. Stern, General Secretary of the Catholic Near East Welfare Association, who will speak on the present volatile situation in the Middle East and its effect on relations among the Christians, Jews, and Muslims there. Do plan to attend our national gathering this year if at all possible. Our Catholic Program will certainly benefit us all with its content and dialogue.

In late October, I attended my first meeting of the Bishops’ Committee on Ecumenism and Interreligious Affairs (BCEIA). The meetings are held twice a year in Chicago. We were hosted at the National Headquarters of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America. This significant ecumenical gesture of hospitality is but one of many that I’m sure we all experience as concrete signs of outreach and koinonia as we travel the road to unity together. Bishop Stephen Blaire of Stockton and Chair of the Bishops’ Committee led a productive meeting highlighted by an interesting discussion about the United States Catholic Church joining the new ecumenical body, Christian Churches Together in the USA (CCT). At the meeting, committee member Cardinal William Keeler of Baltimore was honored by the ELCA leadership for his special anniversaries this year as priest, archbishop, and cardinal as well as for his numerous endeavors to promote ecumenical and interreligious life in the Church and beyond. Our Association takes this opportunity to congratulate Bishop Richard Sklba of Milwaukee who was elected Co-Chair of the BCEIA at the annual USCCB Washington meeting this past November. He begins his full-time term as chair this coming fall.

My travels as your president have also taken me to Chicago several other times during the past six months to be present at Cardinal Walter Kasper’s lecture on the Fortieth Anniversary of the Declaration on Ecumenism, as well as the Fifth Anniversary Celebration of the Joint Declaration Document on Justification.
Christmas, New Year, Epiphany 2004-2005
by Fr. Francis Tiso

Dear Friends,

I have just come back from travels in Italy, Egypt and Turkey. I felt that it would be important to visit the Middle East at the start of my work at the Secretariat for Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs. Sometimes seeing even a partial view of a situation is worth more than reading many books and news reports. I also hoped to make some person-to-person contacts that would make it possible to get responses to the kinds of questions that come up at the US Conference of Catholic Bishops.

In northern Italy, I met with a group of Catholics who have been exploring eastern spiritualities for a number of years. Our retreat was an opportunity to deepen our awareness of the graces we are always receiving, and to celebrate those graces with prayer, music, and movement. Our conversations touched upon the future of Christianity in Europe, and on the ways open to us to build a peace with Islam and with the current wave of rampant secularism. In southern Italy, a local group organized a very effective panel on interreligious routes to peace making that included a young Muslim student leader, a Waldensian pastor, an educator, and a member of the Naples branch of the Community of Sant’Egidio. The auditorium was full to overflowing for this presentation, which I was asked to sum up at the end. Quite a number of those present expressed very serious concerns about the intentions of Islamic states with regard to Europe, but there was also a very strong conviction that interreligious dialogue is an indispensable part of the way to build a peaceful future.

In Egypt, I gave a presentation on the history of interreligious dialogue at the American University in Cairo. The audience kept me 45 minutes beyond the allotted time for intense questions about the ways and means to promote dialogue under the present circumstances of war and terrorism. I also had an opportunity to wander about the city on foot, which is often the best way to pick up the “zeitgeist”. I found the people (that is, ordinary folk, not just the bazaar sharpies) to be very friendly, even to an American, and that it is possible to share a joke even with spotty Arabic and a potpourri of languages and gestures.

In Turkey, I joined in with some American educators and clergy that were being accompanied by members of the movement inspired by the spiritual teacher Fethullah Gulen. The movement is trying to bring modernity and professionalism to Turkey by building schools, universities, and hospitals and by reaching the people through a variety of news services. We were able to meet with some leading members of the movement for conversations that reached considerable spiritual depth. One might hope that, in the future, relations between Muslims and Christians might be more along these lines, and the violent conflicts of the past will be healed. A great deal needs to be done to inform the people of Turkey of the real history and doctrines of Christianity. In fact, a lack of knowledge of Christianity is one of the principle obstacles to effective dialogue and peace-making in the Middle East. Of course, a lack of knowledge of Islam in the US continues to create political problems.

A high point of the journey was the December 17 celebration of the “Nuptial Night” of the Sufi Saint Rumi Mevlana, whose tomb is in Konya (ancient Iconium of Acts 14). There was great spiritual intensity around the tomb, with hundreds of devotees pressing one another to be near the place of repose of the saint. That evening, a company of nearly 200 dervishes of the Mevlano Order performed their famous dances accompanied by traditional instruments in a new Cultural Center. Members of the Turkish government and religious leaders were present, in what seemed to be a gesture of reserved mutual recognition, keeping in mind that Sufi Orders were banned by the secularist reforms that gave birth to modern Turkey after World War I.

Now that I am back in Washington, I am looking forward to a year in which interreligious dialogue may contribute something to the world-wide longing for peace. Certainly we cannot go on misunderstanding one another: the barriers to knowledge must come down. I am reminded, though, of the advice of the French Dominicans who have an excellent center for Arabic studies in Cairo: One needs a geological patience...(on ha besoin d’ une patience géologique)!

May your 2005 be a year of grace and renewal. I am very grateful to you for your many prayers and kindnesses; my friends also have a “geological patience” with me, thanks be to God!

In friendship

Cardinal Kasper (head of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity) and Bishop Mark Hanson (President of the World Federation of Lutheran Churches) co-presided at the later event.

The ceremony was held in conjunction with the Board of ELCA Annual Bishops' Meeting. I also attended part of the NADEO Faiths in the World Committee meeting held in Chicago in October; the National Council of Churches annual convention held this year in nearby St. Louis in November; the Fortieth Anniversary observance of the Decree on Ecumenism held by Eden Seminary and the Archdiocese of St. Louis in January; and a presentation by Br. Jeff Gros and Rev. Paul Shreck entitled "Luther/Catholic Workshop: Can you be a Christian All by Yourself?" sponsored by the Lutherans and Catholics in St. Louis; and lastly, at the end of February, I attended the annual EDEO (Episcopal) and LERN (Lutheran) combined Boards Meeting in Delray Beach, FL to which they invite each year the president of NADEO as well as our two liaisons to their groups, demonstrating our ever increasing LARC (Lutheran, Anglican, Roman Catholic) relationship.

As I travel to these various gatherings and meetings, from my home in Southern IL, I am very conscious of the numerous ways our own ecumenical and interreligious officers and other personnel are promoting our common goal of building and understanding and closer relationships between people of various religious backgrounds. In the name of our NADEO officers—Mgr. Dennis Mikulanis, Mgr. George Appleyard, and our new treasurer, Fr. Joe Wallace, we thank you for your dedicated efforts which are interreligious mission we together serve.

Have a joyous Holy Week and Easter and I hope to see you in New Orleans.

God's peace,
Fr. Bob Flannery

An Ecumenical Calendar of Saints in the Making

Different churches have different ways of commemorating saints and martyrs—people who lived a Christ-like life or can serve as an example of faith. But one thing has become evident in recent times: the divide between the Roman Catholic and Orthodox churches on the one hand, and the Protestant churches on the other regarding the martyrs' impact on spirituality is no longer as deep as it was.

The reformers turned against the adoration of saints and their use as intercessors and intermediaries between God and mankind, but saints are important as examples in faith and witnessing. Protestant churches increasingly recognize that the legitimate condemnation of abuses has undermined consciousness of communion with the witnesses of the past. During the recent plenary meeting of the WCC Faith and Order Commission in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, (August, 2004), the members of the Commission asked the churches to compile a list of saints known and remembered in each church. The churches are also being asked to look beyond their confessional borders to identify those Christian witnesses from outside their tradition whom they would like to see included in this calendar.

Once completed, the calendar is to be published by the WCC, and is expected to be an inspiring source for and a contribution to ecumenical spirituality. Until the first edition of the ecumenical calendar of saints and martyrs becomes available—and of course afterwards, churches and parishes are being invited to walk towards each other and to discover the common memory and roots within their various worship and spirituality traditions. The feast of All Saints could literally be one!

who are still on the spiritual path.

Imam Mostafa al-Qazwini further clarified the notion of abrogation and demonstrated the correct interpretation of Quranic passages criticizing Jews and Christians. A consistent application of interpretative methods as presented by Dr. Siddiqui should lead to deeper understanding and avoidance of those interpretations that have given rise to violence. A greater attention to the ethical guidance in our revealed scriptures was proposed as a way to correct an overly "otherworldly" tendency in religious belief and practice. Recent efforts in Christian "theology of hope" is a way of naming injustice in the world and at the same time recognizing the power of God both in time and at the end of time to set right that which human sinfulness has turned to evil. Fr. Jose Rubio noted that numerous narratives are shared by the Quran and the Bible and suggested further research on the revelation that we have in common. The dialogue provided an opportunity to examine the historical circumstances surrounding the revelation of the Quran in order to counter frequent misrepresentations of Islamic belief and practice in contemporary US society.

Canon Francis Tiso presented a survey of the history of Catholic Biblical interpretation, beginning with the decisive actions of Jesus in the Gospels. The Christological interpretation of Old Testament texts, the meditative reading of Scripture, and the role of preaching in the Patristic period were examined. Medieval exegesis and the four "meanings" or senses of Scripture were examined in the light of Renaissance, Reformation, and modern developments in the critical or scientific study of the text. Dr. Karim Abdullah's response addressed the question of the essential religious truths towards which interpretation must lead the believer. The text itself, illuminated by the message of monotheism in the Hebrew scriptures, makes demands of the interpreter. Careful interpretation, based on criteria that God has revealed, leads to correct action in the world.

CLINIC lawyer, Don Kerwin, directed attention to the problems the respective immigrant communities have been experiencing since the 9/11 attacks. CLINIC is a Catholic legal aid association under the USCCB; it monitors civil rights abuses and seeks to assist communities that are experiencing difficulties under the law. In addition, CLINIC provides critical evaluation of the effectiveness of law enforcement policies of the government so that legislation can be improved. In a second session, Kerwin examined the basic principles of Catholic teachings on social justice and human rights, applying them to the situation of immigrants. Rights are seen as intrinsic and rooted in one's basic humanity, created by God; natural rights cannot be abrogated by states. Pastoral care of migrants is rooted in the long history of the People of God, from the migrations of Abraham and the ancient Israelites to modern refugees and asylum seekers. Pastoral care must also include political empowerment and safeguarding of basic human rights. Politically, it is necessary to ask what legal structures truly safeguard human rights and the common good of states. People who are exercising their natural right to migrate should be assisted by states with appropriate legislation. Considerable debate followed, examining cases and statistics cited by participants who are experienced in pastoral and social justice activities.

The dialogue group developed plans for another meeting at Rancho Palos Verdes in 2006, taking up the topic: "Sharing the Life of Faith," in which common narratives, festivals and family life, and women's concerns will be discussed.
Institute at St. Joseph’s Marks Two Historic Anniversaries

On May 18, 2005, the Jewish-Catholic Institute of Saint Joseph’s University will commemorate two events which marked historic breakthroughs in the Catholic Church and interfaith relations in the United States.

The first was the conclusion in December, 1965 of the Second Vatican Council which, in four separate sessions from 1962-65, revised the discipline, theology and liturgical practice of the Roman Catholic Church in this country and throughout the world. The second was the promulgation by one Council of the document Nostra Aetate (“In Our Time”), outlining a new perspective on the relations of the Church to non-Christian religions, especially to Judaism and the Jewish people.

Speakers for the program will be two highly respected scholars who have played a major role in much of the forty year history since the Council. Dr. Eugene Fisher is associate director of the Secretariat for Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, in charge of Catholic-Jewish relations, a post he has held since 1977. Rabbi James Rudin is the former director of Interreligious Affairs for the American Jewish Committee and continues as senior interreligious advisor for the AJC.

The program, which is free and open to the public, will begin at 7:15 PM on the evening of Wednesday, May 18 in the Haub Conference Center, McShain Hall, on the St. Joseph’s University campus. It will be preceded by an informal reception beginning at 6:15 PM. For further information contact Fr. Donald Clifford, S.J. at 610-660-1439.

An Institute for Interreligious Leadership

The National Association of Diocesan Ecumenical officers and the Bishops’ Committee for Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs are again sponsoring the Institute for Interreligious Leadership in the summer of 2005 to provide training and professional development to ecumenical officers and others serving the Catholic community in this increasingly important area of concern.

The ten-day seminar will survey key Church documents, events, theological and pastoral principles, and current issues in the field. Major religious traditions of the world, particularly those present in the U.S. today, will be introduced. Dialogue topics arising from the current state of interreligious conversations and practical pastoral questions will shape the agenda according to the needs of the participants. There will also be opportunities to visit Islamic, Buddhist, Hindu, and Baha’i sites. The resource team will be led by Canon Francis Tiso, Ph.D. and Fr. Thomas Baima, S.T.D. Experts in the various religions will join the institute as guest lecturers.

The Institute will begin on Tuesday, July 5, 2005, and conclude at midday on Friday, July 15. It will be held at the University of Saint Mary of the Lake in Mundelein, Illinois. The fee of $998.00 will include registration, room, board, materials, and other expenses. Application accompanied by a $100 deposit should be made to:

How Do We Develop a Younger Generation of Ecumenical Leaders?

by Jason Renken

How do we develop a younger generation of ecumenical leaders? At the 2005 National Workshop for Christian Unity, four young adult ecumenists seek the answers to this question: Andrew (AJ) Boyd, Roman Catholic; Melanie Gibbons, ELCA Lutheran; Jason Renken, Roman Catholic; and Whitney Walton, United Methodist.

But how do we develop a generation that has grown up with a very post-modern Christianity? Andrew Boyd reflects on this, stating, “Our passion for ecumenism must be at least as great as our passion for orthodoxy, for evangelization, for holiness, for service.”

It is clear that the responsibility for “passing on ecumenism” rests both with those new to the ecumenical movement, as well as those who have been involved for decades. This is a mutual effort, and Boyd states that “[w]e must be bridge builders across generations and paradigms, not just denominations and polities.”

Focusing on the formation of this next generation of ecumenists, there is a need for concrete ways to support them, as well as the denominational regions, ecumenical offices and churches they serve. For both clergy and laity, there continues to be a great desire – a hunger – for Christian unity, but little opportunity for newcomers to the movement to undergo a genuine introduction to the theology and praxis of ecumenism.

All ecumenists must be people of service, above all, to other Christians and to the ecumenical movement. We invite you to participate in this process by contacting Andrew Boyd at aj@smmparish.org or Jason Renken at jrenken@archchicago.org.

After the 2005 National Workshop, you can keep up with the progress of developing a younger generation of ecumenical leaders by going to the NADEO web page at www.nadeo.org and clicking on the button marked “For Young Ecumenists”.
